

ABSTRACT

The invention concerns a device for measuring at least one item of physiological information in an individual, comprising a flexible membrane designed to come into contact with the skin of the individual and participating in the definition of a deformable space for a flexible substance, the substance transmitting to at least one sensor at least one physical force undergone by the membrane.